It is routinely heralded by scholars, policymakers, and global institutions as an assurance of political stability and economic development and as a protection for fundamental concepts of fairness and human dignity. Given the appeal of these lofty aims, however, ROL at an international level has never seemed more elusive--from law's seeming irrelevance in the face of violent conflicts to its seeming impotence in deterring global abuses like corruption, environmental degradation, and human rights violations. International arbitration, meanwhile, is arguably one of the most effective means of international resolution and promoting international legal accountability. Despite this promise, international arbitration is rarely discussed in the context of promoting the rule of law. In this opening roundtable, participants representing a range of stakeholders will discuss the prerequisites for international arbitration to promote international rule of law and the challenges that may impede that aim. CO-CHAIRS LLUIS PARADELL Freshfields Bruckhaus Deringer ALISON MACDONALD Essex Court Chambers PARTICIPANTS MARIACHIARA MALAGUTI President, UNIDROIT VALENTINA FERRI ENI S.P.A. 1:45-3:30PMCOMMENTARY ON CLAIMS TRIBUNALS & INTRODUCTION TO PANEL*CHIARA GIORGETTI University of RichmondWHEN PEACEFUL DISPUTE RESOLUTION MEETS THE WORLD'S CONFLICTS

Some of the most striking moments in the alternative settlement of international disputes is when it has been invoked to resolve peacefully some of the world's most intractable violent conflicts. The international community has established various types of tribunals, from the Iran-US Claims Tribunal, the Eritrea-Ethiopia Claims Tribunal, and the Holocaust Claims Resolution Tribunals; to compensation commissions such as the UN Compensation Commission (Iraq-Kuwait); to Registries of Damage such as the one established for the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the one created for the Russian Invasion and Occupation of Ukraine; to more traditional arbitration tribunals, like the Abyei arbitration between Sudan and South Sudan, the UNCLOS tribunal in South China Seas disputes, and the tribunal established between Colombia and FARC.

This panel will examine how and under which conditions various alternative mechanisms for the settlement of disputes can contribute to the peaceful resolution of global crises.

International organizations generally enjoy immunity from suits in national courts. But if individuals who have claims against international organizations cannot sue in national courts, where can they bring their claims? Similarly, if international organizations have claims against other actors, where can they bring their claims? These questions implicate both notions of accountability and access to justice, as well as complex theoretical and practical issues.

This panel will address these and other issues raised by international arbitration disputes involving international organizations.

INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION AND ALLEGATIONS OF CORRUPTION OR ILLEGALITY: IS THERE A RULE OF LAW IMPERATIVE?

LUCINDA LOW Senior Counsel at Steptoe & Johnson; Chair of the Board of Directors the Coalition for Integrity; Member of the U.S. Secretary of State's Advisory Committee on International Law

11:00AM-12:30PM

WHEN INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION MEETS CORRUPTION

Corruption is, in many ways, the antithesis of the Rule of Law. Corruption is an insidious social phenomenon that is implicated, directly and indirectly, in many international commercial and investment transactions. Decades ago, corruption was considered beyond the scope of arbitrators' powers. Today, arbitrators are increasingly expected to address potential corruption head-on, to raise concerns about corruption sua sponte, and potentially to report corrupt behavior to authorities. Despite all the progress, many questions remain about such fundamentals as standards of proof, the substantive and procedural consequences of allegations of corruption, the effect of corruption on the recognition and enforcement of arbitral awards, and the professional duties of arbitration counsel and other participants.

This panel will unpack those complexities, including their treatment in several high-profile recent cases.

WHEN INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION ENGAGES WITH THE WORLD'S GREATEST CHALLENGES

The most pressing challenges today are beyond the power of any single government to resolve—climate change and pollution, epic levels of migration, pandemics, wars, and global financial crises. At the same time, international law and traditional international organizations have suffered stress fractures under the incredible pressure of these challenges. When these challenges are implicated in disputes, adjudicators must rule on them, even in the absence of contemporaneous inter-governmental cooperation.

This panel will consider whether and how international dispute resolution can rise to meet these various challenges.
